Snohomish County Executive Aaron Reardon is hosting his inaugural Community Council, opening a dialogue on such issues as economic opportunities, violence and domestic abuse, race relations/diversity and housing.

Reardon called for the creation of the Community Council in the aftermath of a March cross-burning in Arlington. The County Executive noted then that the face of Snohomish County “is changing and will continue to change.”

During the first meeting, volunteers will talk about the Community Council’s role and responsibility and discuss committee assignments, outcomes and timelines. Future meetings will also be scheduled.
