County, Arts Commission Exhibit Features Northwest Original Sculptures

Artworks representing a variety of styles from six Puget Sound region artists” will be on public display as part of a temporary sculpture exhibition on the Snohomish County Plaza, 3000 Rockefeller, Everett, beginning June 20, 2007.

“Public art contributes to community identity and character,” said County Executive Aaron Reardon. “Incorporating art into the urban landscape of the County Plaza supports the arts and promotes our campus as a community gathering place.”

The sculpture exhibition including “African Totems” by Steve Jensen, James Madison’s “The Raven Brings the Light,” Merrilee Moore’s “Loophole”, “Angel of Music” by Alexei Kazantsev, “Pilaster” by Brandon Zebold and John Sisko’s “Minotaur” will be on display through 2007.

“One of the goals of the Snohomish County Arts Commission is to connect citizens with a range of cultural opportunities that celebrate the diverse arts and culture of the County, said Rebecca Chawgo, Chair of the arts commission. “This exhibition brings new cultural experiences and exploration directly into the lives of our community.”

The free exhibit is open to the public and accessible during County business hours.
