

Snohomish County Transition Council

Meets the first Wednesday of the month from 7:00am to 8:30am October through June.

The Snohomish County Transition Council is a group of community agencies, school districts, service providers, and advocates, who support effective transitions for students (ages 18-21) exiting high school special education programs and moving into community based supported employment and community living.

Activities include but are not limited to:

- Provides opportunities for networking and resource exchange between school districts in Snohomish County, sharing different models and information about what is and is not working.
- Supports collaborating partners to empower students and encourage parent involvement in moving towards work and to actively participate in the community.
- Provides opportunities for Special Education Administrators to discuss current transition trends and share best practices.
- Provides information about community resource through presentations, resource fairs, and written materials and grant information.
- Promotes general public awareness about people with developmental disabilities as contributing members of the workforce.
- Serves as a change agent to encourage students/families to explore inclusive opportunities.
- Encourages collaborative interactions between school districts and post school services; including supported employment agencies, Division of Developmental Disabilities, Department of Vocational Rehabilitation and community colleges.
- Serves as a liaison representative with local, state and federal groups that address high school transition issues.

Contact:

Melinda Bocci, Snohomish County Developmental Disabilities
425-388-7259 melinda.bocci@snoco.org